

A Magical Little Feast

Darrell Fusaro (October 04, 2009)

Frankie Competelli, born on New York City's renowned Mulberry Street in Little Italy, is one of those pioneers who helped bring the Feast of San Gennaro to L.A. While they were celebrating its 8th edition late last month, October was being proclaimed as Italian Heritage Month by the City of Los Angeles, the fifth metropolitan area in the US with the highest number of Italians.

HOLLYWOOD, CA. A wiser man than I once told me that, "a man isn't happy because he is rich, he is rich because he is happy." Today I have my proof. Restaurateur, Frankie Competelli, an Italian American born on New York City's renowned Mulberry Street in Little Italy. He spent his childhood attending the yearly Feast of San Gennaro and he appears to be the richest man in Los Angeles.

Standing with Frankie in the middle of a crowd at this year's Feast of San Gennaro in Los Angeles, it's obvious why he's so happy; he's one its four founders.

Celebrating its eighth year in Los Angeles, located in Hollywood, on Highland Avenue just a block from Mann's Chinese Theater, it is still unbelievable to the founders of this event, that their dream to bring the Italian American tradition of their ancestors in New York City to Los Angeles, has continued to flourish. When Frankie Competelli, Late Night Television Host Jimmy Kimmel, Radio Personality Adam Carolla and TV Producer Doug Deluca would get together at Frankie's restaurant, "Frankie's New York Italian Restaurant on Melrose," they would often reminisce about the ol' "Feast" back in New York City. Then one day they decided to make a commitment to bring it to life in sunny California.

In 2001, with a lot of faith, some luck and the support of Precious Cheese, their very first sponsor, the very first Feast of San Gennaro in Los Angeles took place on a small church parking lot across from the Capitol Records building. "That was a very magical little festival," says Frankie Competelli. Apparently, when looking for their first location, Frankie decided to talk to the Priest at Christ the King Church on Rossmore Avenue and when it was discovered that the Father just happened to be an actual Italian Priest from Naples, Italy, he just knew it was meant to be.

Their goal was clear and their motive true. Bring Italian American heritage to life in Los Angeles with the Feast and in the spirit of St. Gennaro, the patron saint of Naples, Italy, give help to those who need it in the community. "We formed the San Gennaro Foundation, a non-profit, and all of our proceeds go to helping charitable institutions in Hollywood, such as the Battered Women's Shelter and the homeless children."

A very humble man, Frankie made it clear that credit for the success of the Feast does not just belong to the four founders. "There are so many people, Italian Americans from all over Los Angeles that make this possible every year." As Frankie begins to name them, he realizes that there are so many to thank he couldn't possibly name them all.

Thanks to Frankie and his friends there has been a new interest in preserving Italian American heritage throughout Los Angeles, CA. One of the first fruits of the Feast was the formation of a Los Angeles chapter of The Sons of Italy, "the Hollywood Lodge which is four to five hundred people strong from zero." Frankie proudly notes. This paved the way to getting a financial commitment from the City of Los Angeles to restore the Italian Hall on North Main Street in downtown Los Angeles, as a showcase of Italian American History in CA. And, just recently, October has been proclaimed as Italian Heritage Month by the City of Los Angeles.

California ranks as the third state with the highest Italian American population, after New York and New Jersey. Los Angeles is the fifth metropolitan area in the US with the highest number of Italians. For a long time you wouldn't know it because we were all spread out. But no longer. Now gatherings of Italian Americans in Los Angeles are becoming the norm, rather than the exception.
